

© Lard Buurman

Growth Monument

Goirkestraat 96
5046 GN Tilburg, Niederlande

ARCHITEKTUR
NEXT ARCHITECTS

FERTIGSTELLUNG
2010

SAMMLUNG
newroom

PUBLIKATIONSdatum
28. August 2011

A monument to represent the blossoming and flourishing of the city of Tilburg, a „textielgroeimonument“ (textile growth monument), realized at the Textielmuseum Tilburg in 2009 as part of the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the city. Since the Mommerscomplex that accommodates the textile museum is metaphorically speaking a living monument, would it perhaps be possible to create a growing monument that is literally built up from living matter?

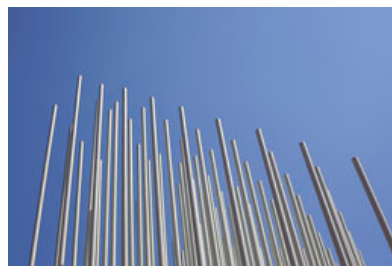

The new volume can be read as an addition to the industrial complex: a shape that brings to mind the high factory buildings; a reprise of the building structure of the textile museum.

The overgrowth lends to the monument the dynamics of nature. It literally grows, and this ensures that it always looks alive. It is not a massive volume but a transparent, open structure.

A platform connects the interior space with the courtyard. It provides a possible connection to the monument and a starting point in the open space around the complex. It facilitates encounters and exchanges and in doing so it adopts the part of accelerator in the creative public domain that is currently being developed in Goirkestraat. And so as the volume turns the past into a visible experience in the present, the platform is the first step towards the future.

© Lard Buurman

© Lard Buurman

Growth Monument

DATENBLATT

Architektur: NEXT ARCHITECTS (Bart Reuser, Marijn Schenk, Michel Schreinemachers, John van de Water.)

Funktion: Denkmäler

Planung: 2008

Ausführung: 2009 - 2010

Bruttogeschossfläche: 36 m²

Baukosten: 90.000,- EUR

Growth Monument

growth1