Villa Artes is a housing project in the centre of Portorož, the main slovenian seaside resort. It is constructed out of eight individualy shaped flats, with a large outside open space area. The project has been developed on the thesis of the master abauth identity of space in contemporary architecture. Starting points were added to the urban conditions. Characteristic of the traditional architecture were treted as a proces, a metod which created new resaults. The building is devided in 8 parts, each has a diferent orgnisation, which is based on the scheme of the organisation of old city palaces. They have all the same acces (in the statue from t he 15th century, it is considered as a basic right). Instead of green atriums, there is a garden. All the materials are taken from the local area. The fasade is manely made of stone and has a textile texture, it is a reinterpretation of he 15th century) important palaces of the cityies of the coast.
