The last five years in the history of Pellérd can be a good example for everyone, I think. The leaders of the village and the mayor, József Metzging have long-range plans. Seven years ago they have prepared a regulation concept that has shown up the conditions of a future village center. Later, they asked our office to make a study-plan of this center. As a result of this long lasting planning process Pellérd and its center now possesses a well prepared future development plan. They have already built a bank, the town hall, and the new school with the sports hall. They organize the constructions of the new kindergarten and the communal sport grounds. Everything goes on according to plan, step by step.

The town hall should be an emblematic building. A symbol. A building of high European standards, that takes attention and expresses the honored function of a public building and the democratic openness towards its citizens. Inside we wanted to accentuate the same thing: the open relation of clients and officials. Instead of communication through little holes on the glass wall we put the client in focus – for whom and from whose taxpayings we built this office. So the open area for the clients is in the center of the building and we organized the administration rooms around this central space. We made toilets for disabled as well and for the comfort of officials we gave place for a spacious kitchen and dining hall. (architect's text)
